Pourquoi êtes-vous devenu.e ambassadeur.trice pour ERUA? Qu'est-ce qui vous inspire?

My interest is in supporting this project in the current climate where higher education is becoming difficult, in terms of guidance due to reforms (master's) and in terms of funding universities (budget cuts, lack of personnel).

To be able to develop this project is to create a group of students which to access the possibility through the Erasmus program, to open up to the world, to live an enriching experience, and to exchange, debate and discuss with others. This project is not a way of sidelining the problems facing universities in France and Europe in general, but of creating a space for debate on the issues that run through them (freedom of expression, resources allocated to research and teaching).

Being able to create and develop strong European cooperation between ERUA member universities ensures greater autonomy and the possibility of creating projects to enable Université Paris 8 to benefit as much as possible from new perspectives for students (inclusivity, equality, solidarity, etc.). We must promote the values of the European Union, which are those that unite us and promote our freedoms.
